

Character: St Teresa of Avila (Resa)

Who you were: Before you were brought back to life, you lived in Spain before dying in 1582. You were born into a family of 10 children. Your mother died when you were young and your father sent you away to a convent school. You became an intelligent and revolutionary writer. You also became a nun, becoming very ill shortly afterwards. You struggled with health your entire life. One day, when you'd been struggling for decades, you felt God's presence and were filled with joy. You became well-known for your laughter and jokes.

How you came back different: You are somehow able to speak present-day English and have a working knowledge of modern times. You are also... two people. Your brain has been separated into two identical clone bodies. When your two bodies are near one another, you are capable of great feats of strength (+2 to strength rolls). When your bodies are separated by 120 feet or more, they become sick and will go to sleep within 2 rounds if they aren't reunited. If your sleeping bodies are placed next to each other, they'll wake up again. You share a turn, and often finish each others... sentences.

You have the sense of humour aspect of Teresa's personality. You crack a lot of jokes and have trouble taking anything seriously. You are not smart though, and have trouble understanding complex ideas. Your relationship with your clone is a complicated one as you are both struggling to rediscover yourselves as individuals.

Race/Class/Alignment: You are a human thief. With regards to your general morals and attitude, you are Neutral Good (NG), which means you believe in doing what is right and good without bias for or against law and order.
